The General Terms and Conditions of UniCredit Bank Hungary Zrt. apply. Errors and misprints excepted.

Important notes:

Costs:

The costs of the OTC derivative contract specified above are indicative costs based on, among other factors, market prices prevailing when this indicative cost information was prepared, and on the costs and charges of UniCredit Bank Hungary Zrt.. The indicative costs may therefore differ from the costs which may actually be incurred when concluding the relevant OTC derivative contract, reflecting changes in interest rates, forward rates, exchange rates, market prices, indices and other measures of value.

Pricing and market value of OTC derivative contracts:

The pricing of OTC derivative contracts comprises market prices, costs such as hedging costs (i.e. costs incurred by the Bank when concluding a hedge transaction) and/or regulatory and risk provision as well as a charge (i.e. revenue) payable to UniCredit Bank Hungary Zrt.. As a consequence, immediately after conclusion of an OTC derivative contract, the market value of the contract is reduced by an amount equal to such costs, revenue and any premium you may have received upon conclusion of the OTC derivative contract (giving a negative market value for you) compared with the time when the contract was concluded.

The value of any product-specific rights – including, for example, a break clause – has already been taken into account for pricing purposes. If the OTC derivative contract is settled in a currency other than the currency used for providing this indicative cost information, currency risk must additionally be taken into account, which may have an effect on the overall price.

As long as the master agreement is effective, unless explicitly agreed otherwise, early termination of OTC derivative contracts is only possible with the consent of both contractual parties. If you wish to terminate an OTC derivative contract before maturity, the information given above for the conclusion of a new contract will apply also to the pricing upon termination. Depending on whether the market value taking the relevant market prices, costs and charges into account is positive or negative, cash settlement in your favour or in favour of the Bank will take place upon termination.

In the case of OTC derivative transactions it is not possible to calculate the cumulative effects on the return on the investment per year (RIY), and therefore such effects cannot be indicated.
